Is your content doing the selling for you? It should be.

Many businesses struggle to get the positive attention and professional corporate image they deserve. Some give their precious dollars to an advertising agency thinking that is the only way to get noticed. Not so!

Your business doesn't have to spend a small fortune to advertise itself or have spectacular marketing materials. All you need is a good copywriter to create compelling "copy" that will sell your products or services. When you hire Kristen Fischer to do that, you get an affordable price, too.

Kristen can handle all your marketing collateral needs. She can create content for your website, that brochure you've been meaning to get done, and even keep your employees updated with a newsletter. Have reports that need editing or polishing up? She does that, too. Kristen works with you to help identify your message and convey it to achieve your business objectives.

5 ways to promote your business

Go cyber. If you don't have a website, you're missing a valuable business tool that gives your company an Internet presence.

Get in the news. The key to getting "press" is being featured in the newspaper. And you do that with a press release to announce company news.

Leave them with literature. It's the best way to sell when you're not there. A brochure will market your business long after the customer leaves with it in hand.

Let them search for you. SEO-based keyword website writing is a simple way to attract people via the Internet.

"Sell" them on it. Advertising is an effective way to get your products or services—as well as your name—out there. Make sure the content of your ad sells what you have to offer by explaining the benefits of your product or service, instead of just telling them about your company.
